PARIS ADOPTS LONGER SKIRTS

Ten Inches Favored for Suits, With Dressy Frock Touching the Floor.

SLEEVES MUCH IN LIMELIGHT

Arm Covering Beautiful and Wonderful to Behold—Loose and Wrappy Coats Are Favored—Evening Gowns Are Draped.

Paris sends us beauty in the ways of fashion for 1921 that surpasses even her previous efforts, observes a fashion writer. The designers there in the heaven of good dressing have created costumes and coats and suits to rival even their own efforts of the past.

The word is that there is nothing radically different, and yet each thing is so different in itself that it deserves a paragraph—a eulogy—all its own. The Parisian designer cannot repeat himself. His every effort is a distinct achievement, and the French gowns that are shown for this season only serve to accentuate that fact. One can look at them forever and not run the risk of being bored by any bald repetition.

But as for the points of style. Yes, there are these in some abundance, and when one starts to assemble them one finds that they are much more numerous than they promised to be.

The skirts are longer. That in itself is an established fact. Some of the designers have chosen to leave the suit skirts at a moderate length, say ten inches from the floor, but the more dressy the frock, the longer it grows, until we find them for evening touching the floor in some few cases. However, if it is smart, it is long.

Sleeves Are Much Longer.

Then, to follow the lines of the dropping skirts, every other line, by force of suggestion, has also taken a drop. There are the sleeves. They are much longer, and they are broader, too, just as the skirts have taken to themselves more fullness.

Sleeves, in fact, are the sensation of the season. We hardly expected them to be. We had looked to skirts to provide the thrill of change, but here are the sleeves most beautiful, most wonderful to behold. Dressmakers and designers had had a rest from sleeves for some time, so they came back to the problem with a zeal that shows itself gloriously in the things they have put before the public. And the women who love to dress—they, too, come back to sleeves with enthusiasm, glorying to show the graceful sweep of their arms by the whirl of the chiffon trailing along, liking to feel the looseness and wrapiness of the extra folds about their arms.

Sleeves are trimmed and trimmed in many different ways. There are heavy trimmings on frail foundations and there are way lines of tulle applied to heavier materials. There are sleeves of alternating stripes running crossways are inclined, as a class, to have long waists, again presenting the harmony of long lines. The French dressers blouse over the hips at a low line, which, a year ago, we would have believed impossible to wear. But they have done it and done it well and it is really surprising how becoming the longer waistline, not to mention a bulging waistline, can be. Even on the evening gowns the waistline is accentuated by thick and protruding trimmings. One no longer makes a fetish of the fairy waistline, but one adds on interminably with no thought for tinness just at that particular place.

The evening gowns are draped and draped again, with one portion of the drapery obliterating another portion.

Gray Caracul and Blue Velours Are Used for the Construction of This "Tailleur."

They look always as though the maker had reveled in the draping of the fabrics and as though she had let her whim carry her along as she pinned and shaped.

Make the Lines Long.

So, Paris says, for these new gowns and coats and wraps and suits make the lines long and the figure tall, and to gain this effect use every trick and fable known to the dressmaker's art. Even the collars are high and tight to add to the general lengthening scheme. And the hats, too, are apt to go straight into the air in another elongated line.

Color is rife among the winter things, for Paris seems to have broken away from the binding spell of black and still more black. Many of their models are, of course, in black, but that somber tone is not entirely prevalent, and we see many of the fuchsia shades, with a decided leaning toward all of the shades of violet used either alone or in combination with other colors. The taupe and gray shades are still good, and we find splashes of more brilliant reds, oranges and greens. A certain dull rust color is one of the French favorites, and they use this in masses uninterrupted by other tones, or they employ it for trimmings where it lends a most interesting color note.

Parisian designers are using a great deal of velvet for the winter models, and they cling to the soft weaves of duvetyne and the thicker woolly fabrics, but they have done many interesting things with fine serges and woven crepes, while a number of them show broadcloth as the very latest idea in the making of gowns and coats.

For evening the metal cloths are as good as ever they were, and while there is a good deal of brocade, it is not nearly so universally used as it was last season. Tulle and chiffon are good, but mostly when they are combined with other materials.

Copy the Russian Blouse.

Most of the jackets on the French tailors follow the lines of the Russian blouse, but the interpretation is so pliable that there are many dozens of expressions of the same idea. These little, bloused coats are held around their lower edges by twisted and corded belts and tassels with ends that dangle either at the side, at front or directly in the middle of the back. Some of the Russian suits are modified and adjusted in very interesting fashion. For instance, a gray costume has a tiny jacket which ends at an extremely short length and falls over a continuation of its own line which fits the figure rather more closely and in shade of rich-colored velours recommended in gray. The whole gives the effect of a rather interesting lampshade draped over the crumpled belt. Another costume suit has a skirt of black velvet and a loose white-gray jacket that is embellished with black velvet design, making altogether a Grecian design.

"God Save the King."

"God Save the King," the national song of Great Britain, dates from 1746. The year of the victory of George II over the French army at Dettingen. The origin of the melody is obscure, although Henry Carey, a musician and poet born in London about 1800, generally is accredited as the author both of the words and the music. The song has spread across the continent in more or less altered form; in fact, Germany and Switzerland each claim it. The music formerly was used by Russia for its national air, while in the United States "America" is said to be

Paris has a feeling for home and wraps coats with dreams to harmonize or to match exactly. This Russian, the designer, is one that is usually feminine that for twenty and there is no end to it. When they make suits over there they carry more or less crinolines, nothing that look as much like street dresses as they do the tailored suits. They call them tailleur, but they bend every effort to take any burden of a tailored look away from them. The dresses among the Paris show-

THE CHALLENGE.

A detailed survey of health conditions in schools of Ulster county organized by the New York State League of Women Voters as part of a state-wide investigation undertaken by that organization has been made public with the statement that it is a "challenge" to parents in the county. According to the league, the survey proves conclusively the need of intelligent and active interest in town and rural schools on the part of parents and taxpayers in Ulster county.

Careful study of the survey would seem also to prove conclusively the need of intelligent and active interest in those who compiled the figures, which in most cases do not jibe no matter what combinations are used. But accepting the figures as given, essentials do not seem to have been overlooked in Ulster county schools. Out of 204 schools in the county, 162 have eye and ear tests made yearly. While 190 have no school nurse, 110 have satisfactory provisions for control of communicable diseases. Health instruction leading to health habits is given in 140 schools and 156 have health leagues or clubs; in 170 physical training is compulsory and in all except four daily exercise periods with open windows are provided. A sanitary survey of buildings is made each year in 103 schools; 24 have large well equipped playgrounds, and in 109 entertainments are encouraged and supervised.

The State Education Department, which is a powerful department of the state government, has many requirements for schools, rural and urban, and the schools are inspected regularly by inspectors who presumably are qualified. The State Health Board likewise employs inspectors of skill. As against their opinion of what worth is a survey made by amateurs unless the state officials are incompetent? Wherein have the local inspectors shown their competency? Without experience, "inspection" reports may depend on personal notions and the mood of the inspector; bias is not unknown in them, but more than all else the inexperienced inspector is apt to fall into the error of mis-stating conclusions for facts. For instance, the survey of Ulster county schools shows that only 22 have "adequate" facilities for treatment of children, and in 166 schools treatment is "difficult to obtain." What is the standard by which "adequate" facilities are determined? In what way is treatment difficult to obtain?

The general summary discloses that only five schools are "adequately equipped and efficiently conserving the health of the children;" in 116, "fair provision for conserving health but handicapped by poor buildings and grounds, lack of money for securing efficient medical inspection and well trained teachers;" in 2, "very little being done and general attitude unprogressive." But what has happened to the other 81 schools?

We should like to have children born perfect, each with an assurance of unlimited sterilized milk throughout childhood, to be followed by growth into manhood and womanhood through perfect education under ideal conditions, which should be succeeded by idyllic careers of fame and fortune under the guidance of self-appointed regulators who finally would induce the patient far beyond the gates of Paradise and relieve God St. Peter of the arduous duty of assignment for the future state. But why not use the means already at hand to do as much of this work as possible? Why not use the machinery of the state education and health departments, using wherever possible local boards of health which still have some jurisdiction?

Meanwhile, how are the general summary conclusions of the survey justified unless facts and skills are the basis of judgment? Anyway, where is the authority or the competency behind the "challenge?"

A writer in the New York Tribune declares that we are obsessed with groundless fears of underbidding by the Chinese in the economic field, giving as a reason his view that the standard of living of the Chinese is rising. Perhaps it would be better to say it is rising. Fifteen cents a day is good pay for a Chinese, even at this time, and still the standard of living has risen far above what it is now. It will be the part of discretion of the United States to take due notice thereof and govern the tariff rates accordingly. This again brings up the question, Why do certain people industriously proselytize for free trade in the United States and thereby work against American living standard? Why do they not "go forth and teach all nations" to pay their laborers a decent wage and set up as a splendid example? That would do more for free trade than their present method. The truth is they want free trade in order that they may import their oriental goods cheaper and make bigger profits. They have no American payroll to meet, except for a few underpaid and underfed counter jumpers.

1. How do oysters reproduce?
2. When should fruit trees be trimmed, and what should be put over the scars?
3. What is the right temperature for a chicken incubator?

Answers in Tomorrow's Nature Notes

Answers To Previous Questions.

1. Do bears live all over?

Not all over the world, if that is what you mean, though they are pretty well distributed, except for Africa and Australia, where none live. In South America only one species is known. We have sixteen species in Middle and North America, with some varieties of the species.

2. Do fishes look after their young?

Generally not, the eggs being left to the elements to hatch. Some species are exceptions. One female catfish carries eggs stuck to its underside; in another catfish, the male carries the eggs in his mouth. In one of the pipe fishes the female has a pouch for egg-carrying; and in other pipe fishes, and the sea horse, the males have egg pouches under the tail in which the young hatch and stay until able to find for themselves.

3. Has the wild turkey, Meleagris gallopavo silvestris, ever been known in the western provinces of Canada? If not, what is the bird called "wild turkey" claimed to have been seen in huge flocks in Sask within recent years?

The American wild turkey was never known to inhabit that district. The bird here reported (with no description or data) might have been the sage hen, particularly if found in southern Saskatchewan.

The writer of this message to his a country would have clamored for duty," and "We have met the enemy and they are ours."

The attack did not fail. The author of this dispatch had said several years before: "A battle won is a battle in which one refuses to admit that one is beaten." After writing the dispatch he saw the order to attack, then, while his men were going forward, he took a young staff officer for a walk and discussed metallurgy and economics.
He then pushed back the enemy at a vital point in the line, the enemy withdrew and Paris was saved.

The message was sent during the first battle of the Marne in September, 1914. It was written by Ferdinand Foch, marshal of France, then a general commanding the Ninth French army holding the allied center.

Second Battle of the Marne.

The offensive begun by Foch at La Fere-Champenoise represents the turning point of the first battle of the Marne. But the allied generalissimo was in a similar situation on the evening of July 17, 1918, while a second battle of the Marne was being fought.
At that time he might have paraphrased his earlier message by writing: "My left in Flanders gives way, my center resists, Paris and the channel ports are menaced. The situation is excellent. I will attack."

And attack he did on the morning of the 18th with two French and two American divisions. He continued to attack until the Germans came to him and asked him to stop, and his attacks did not stop until 10:50 a. m. November 11, 1918. And had the armistice failed, he had yet another and more disconcerting attack planned in every detail for November 14, in which French and American divisions would have swept past Metz and into Lorraine. Since he was twenty, Marshal Foch had been working for the defeat of Germany.

Of the many generals who achieved prominence during the war, Foch and Hindenburg were military school teachers before 1914. Here comparison ends.
Hindenburg was a retired officer during the war. When the Germans moved toward Paris the Russians swept into Prussia, and the German high command was in a near panic.
Then some one remembered the grizzled individual with a close-cropped head and generous mustache who for year after year at the staff college had annihilated the enemy in a paper campaign in the Masurian lake region.
Then invaded by the Russians, Hindenburg was summoned to Berlin. He refreshed himself with his lecture notes, took command of the eastern forces, and the Masurian lakes campaign was won for the Germans. Hindenburg's military reputation rests upon this one campaign that had been a German general staff exercise for years before the war.

Flexibility Foch's Maxim.

With Foch, on the other hand, it was one of his principles that war against a skillful enemy cannot be waged successfully according to blue print alone.
He had been teaching for years to young French officers, candidates for staff positions, that, above all else, modern warfare demands flexibility.
Plans go wrong, and surprises occur constantly which must be met as they come. These were the principles he set forth in his works on the "Art of War," as Foch prefers to term what is called more often military science.
Like other French officers, he saturated himself with Napoleon's campaigns, but in addition he had been a keen student of German staff methods. As a result he accepted neither Napoleon nor the German general staff slavishly, but rather pruned and grafted the two together. The fundamental of his principles of war was the independence upon morale, that is, the intelligence and spirit accompanying the carrying out of orders as to how they are to be done.

It is doubtful whether the French army could be more grateful to Foch for his services during the war or for his work as an instructor at the Staff College of War during the peace years in 1914. He was the first Frenchman, and probably the first military student of importance, who was able to defeat the German operation in the war of 1914. Until Foch came to the Ecole de Guerre in 1904 as a teacher, it was impossible for French officers to study the German methods of 1870 calmly. French officers had been taught, in fact the Ecole de Guerre was established just after the Franco-Prussian war as a part of the reorganization of the French army, with a view to discovering just what happened in 1870.
But until Foch was detailed to the school in 1904 it was just like trying to find out the manner in which Mr.

William Patterson had been assaulted.
It was too soon after the war, for the hearts of both officers and students were too heavy with sadness over the loss of Alsace-Lorraine to investigate the facts dispassionately.

Foch's Anti-German Strategy.

Foch was the first man to fill the French with hope that French general-ship might be a match for German. As calmly, as mathematically and as cold-bloodedly as the German general staff itself, Foch set to work to analyze for his pupils German military science. He arrived at a conclusion just the opposite to what might be expected. Instead of declaring that in the next war France must beat Germany at her own game, he emphasized that French strategy must be the opposite of German, that iron-clad plans must give way to flexibility.

These principles had an enormous effect upon French staff work during the war, for the young students, who were filled with enthusiasm over Foch's maxims laid down in the School of War in the late nineties, were the division commanders and the corps and army staff officers of the World war. That France alone of the allies had well-trained and active-minded staff officers in 1914 is largely due to Foch.

Marshal Foch was born in Tarbes, October 2, 1851. Boyish enthusiasm over the campaigns of Napoleon—he had mastered Thier's "History of the Consulate and the Empire" before he was twelve—filled him with the ambition to enter the army. The year previous to the Franco-Prussian war he was studying at St. Clement's, a Jesuit college in Metz, where more candidates for army commissions were taught than at any other school in France. He enlisted as a private in the Fourth regiment of infantry which never got into action. Alsace-Lorraine lost and with it his beloved school at Metz, he entered the Polytechnique at Fontainebleau, and after the usual garrison life he was detailed to the Ecole de Guerre as assistant professor of military history and strategy.

His Sense of Propriety.

Two stories may be told to illustrate Marshal Foch's sense of fitness of things. There is the incident at his headquarters car the night the German commissioners arrived to negotiate for an armistice. The military delegate was wearing, among other decorations, the cross of the Legion of Honor which had been conferred upon him before the war. The Germans filed into the small room in Marshal Foch's car and saluted. Foch made no sign, but stared at the red ribbon that seemed so out of place among German decorations. While his associates dozed, the German officer finally saw a great light and in silence removed the French decoration. Then Foch acknowledged the salute and entered into a discussion of the armistice terms.

Then there was his tactful, punctilious behavior the day of the Victory Fete in Paris, July 14, 1919. Preliminary plans had Foch selected to lead the allies' march through the Arc de Triomphe, but some friends of Joffre threatened to make political capital if the senior marshal of France did not have a place at the head of the procession. It was a delicate matter to decide which should precede the other. Foch was generalissimo of the allied land forces, yet in the French army he was outranked by Joffre.
It was finally decided that the marshals should ride side by side, but thanks to the tact of Foch, neither outplaced the other. As supreme commander of the Allies, Foch had the position of honor on the right, but throughout the whole five miles of the march through the streets of Paris, Marshal Foch was careful to keep his horse at least a yard behind Joffre.
Foch's right of the line was offset by his allowing Joffre to ride a few feet ahead, and the difficulty was solved.

FAMOUS TUG GETS REPRIEVE

Furnished Inspiration for Stevenson's Story, "The Wreckers."

The old South Sea trading schooner Equator, famous as the vessel on which Robert Louis Stevenson is said to have received the inspiration for his story of "The Wreckers," has been granted a reprieve from Dary Jones' hoeyard of worn-out ships.

The Equator, for many years a tugboat sound steam tug, was about to be discarded, when it was decided to open up her hull. The frames were found to be of Port Oxford cedar and as good, according to marine men, as when she slid down the ways at Beaulieu, Cal., in 1868. As a result the vessel was recently rebuilt, her steam engine replaced with a Diesel power engine, and she will shortly resume her career as a tug.

The story goes that Stevenson, making a voyage in the Equator—then a schooner—among the "islands of existence" was sitting in the cabin one night with a gathering of traders, pearl fishers and others and heard an old South Sea yarn that gave him the idea for "The Wreckers." Later he remembered that fact in his diary.

Years later the Equator was equipped with steam engines and in course of time made her appearance on Pacific coast.

No Doubt.

No doubt about it, his trouble when Eve came into his life, but one thing is certain—the never-complained to him that Mrs. Goodwin had a far cooler and she didn't see why she couldn't have one, too.

AWARDED $150 AND THE COAT

Jury Decides Garment Catherine Kettner Bought From Rosenweig Was Worth Only $50 of The $200 Paid For It.

After being out less than ten minutes the jury in the case of Catherine Kettner vs. Louis Rosenweig returned a verdict for $150 for plaintiff and awarded to her the pony skin coat over which the action was commenced. The case was tried in supreme court Wednesday, Ex-Mayor William D. Brinler appearing for plaintiff.

The case involved the purchase price of a pony skin fur coat which was purchased by plaintiff in November 1920 for which she paid $200. At the time of purchasing the coat plaintiff claimed that she was told by Rosenweig that the coat was high class and of good quality. Within two weeks after purchasing the coat it was necessary to repair the sleeve of the coat and later more trouble was experienced. When the coat was taken back by plaintiff Rosenweig told her to keep it until spring and he would see what he could do. Later he offered to take the coat and give her a new one for $150, applying the value of the old coat to the purchase price of the new one.

Several expert furriers were sworn and testified to the value and condition of the skin. Mr. Leventhal testified the skin in the coat was a "tender" skin but on cross examination said it was "rotten" and worth but $50. For this reason the jury awarded plaintiff $150 and the old fur coat.

The coat was produced in court and in several places witnesses pointed out bad places. In places the coat was easily torn and one of the jurors examined the coat and to satisfy himself that the material was "rotten" tore a hole in the skin.

Ginsberg the furrier was called and testified to making repairs to the coat on various occasions and said the fur was "tender" but a good grade and he did not know what made the holes in the fur. He tried to explain at great length the various qualities of pony skin and other furs.

There were no other cases ready for trial Wednesday afternoon and court adjourned for the day.

The customer approached the wife, threw fifty cents on the counter, and said (as she understood it) "I owe the firm fifty cents." She asked him what for, and he simply repeated what he had said. "I owe the firm fifty cents." She told him she would give him a receipt, and her husband would credit it to him, but he said he didn't want a receipt. "I owe the firm fifty cents," he reiterated.

She called her husband down. He, of course, understood immediately. "Iodoform"—fifty cents worth, that's what he wants.

L. H. Phillips, of 263 West 128th St., New York City, is one of the hundreds who heartily praise Jacques' Little Wonder Capsules. He recently wrote: "I have been afflicted for years with an obstinate case of intestinal indigestion and constipation for which I have used many medicines with little benefit. A friend suggested the use of Jacques' Little Wonder Capsules and I take them in certifying that they have been beneficial from the very start. I heartily recommend them to those similarly afflicted."

HUNGERFORD TELLS ROTARY OF SPAIN

A Country Where The Very Old and the Very New Are Both in Use—Barcelona The Main Spring of The Country But Its Very Wicked.

The speaker at the Rotary Club luncheon Wednesday was Edward Hungerford, who hit the high spots in his experiences and observations in Spain. The speaker announced for the day was David Burgevin, who was expected to "Say it with flowers," but produced Mr. Hungerford as a substitute. Of course Mr. Hungerford talked about the railroads in Spain—he couldn't avoid railroads any more than the late Mr. Dick could avoid the head of King Charles—and some most interesting things he told. For instance, at a railroad restaurant at which the train stopped 30 minutes he ate an eight-course dinner at a cost of 68 cents. After securing a berth in a sleeper the porter offered him the other berth for a fee of one-half the cost of a ticket and finally made a deal with him at one-fifth the price. The porter said he couldn't go any lower than that as he had to divide the graft with the remainder of the train crew.

At the frontier of Spain the traveler has to very literally "change cars" as the Spanish railways are purposely of different gauge than those of France, in order to keep their cars at home. Formerly car bodies were lifted from France to Spanish trucks, and vice versa, but even this transfer has been abandoned.

Spain is a land of contrasts. Progress has been so rapid that much of the old remains with the very newest. In Madrid is an up-to-the-minute subway and in the streets above are two wheeled carts drawn by bullocks. The city looks as though there was a Knights of Pythias convention and a Barium and Bailey circus going on all the time. The king's coach is a wonderfully ornate affair and is driven often through the streets but the king never rides in it—he uses a Rolls-Royce.

Spain made huge profits from the war but gambled the money away in speculation. Yet it progresses by leaps and bounds. It had few gas plants, or even oil lamps, but jumped from candles to electric lighting. In the country the scenery and climate are as in Arizona and New Mexico. The old Spaniards in America must have felt very much at home.

Madrid, the capital, is a show place, an official and social center, but produces nothing but taxes. Barcelona is the business center and pays the taxes, which makes it a trouble center—the Ireland of Spain. Most of the progress and energy of the kingdom come from that part of Spain.

Barcelona never sleeps. The opera begins at 10 o'clock and when Mr. Hungerford left at 12:20 it was still going strong, with two acts still to come. The show, like New York's "Follies," begins at 3 a. m., and the bartender who makes gin fizzes does his work well because he used to work in Chicago.

As a result of the unrest in Barcelona the city is strongly guarded. Police patrol in pairs and in the opera house at least 100 riflemen were scattered among the audience. There are two or three murders every day and the city is about the most wicked in the world.

CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION AT CROSSPATCH HOUSE

Crosspatch Community Center, near Willow, will have a Christmas tree and celebration for the whole countryside on Friday evening, December 28.

The tree will be loaded down with full stockings and boxes of candy. Santa Claus will present a stocking full of toys and a box of candy to every person who comes to the Community House. Grown-ups will share in this celebration just as well as the children.

An oyster supper will be served with cake and coffee and there will be dancing all the evening.

Everybody is cordially invited. There were over a hundred at the celebration last year, but the house will accommodate 150 people and leave room for dancing. The floor of Crosspatch House is the best dancing floor in that vicinity and will allow four sets for a square dance without crowding.

The dining room upstairs will seat fifty people at one time and has all the necessary dishes for such service, so everybody should have a good time.

People are especially asked to bring all the children so they may enjoy Santa Claus and the gorgeous tree.

The tree will be lighted with electric lights in several colors and the house will be decorated with Christmas garlands and wreaths.

Those who wish to have presents for their friends given from the Crosspatch tree can bring them in the afternoon, properly labeled.

Crosspatch house will be open from noon on the day of the 28th, so if any of the older people cannot come in the evening, they can see the tree in the afternoon.

CADYS WOULD WELCOME OTHERS ON LONG CRUISE.

The Rev. Dr. Putnam Cady has been granted by the governing body of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he is pastor, a two months' leave of absence during which period of time he and Mrs. Cady will participate with a special group of Raymond and Whitcomb tourists in taking a Mediterranean cruise and a trip down the Nile. Long a student of the lands to be visited The Azores, Madeira, Spain, Gibraltar, Algiers, Sicily, Italy, Athens, Constantinople, Syria, the Holy Land, Egypt, Corfu, Jago-Slavia, Corsica, France and the Nile country, Dr. Cady will give to the other tourists a greatly added interest and fund of information of inestimable value, while greatly enjoying again visiting the scenes of former journeys on his part. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Cady. February 14, 1922, will be the day of sailing in the palatial steamship George Washington, and the full cruise will take sixty-four days.

If there are other Kingstonians who would like to take this cruise at the same time, Mr. and Mrs. Cady would be glad to give such persons any useful information.

"The Affairs of Anatol"

Think of "Male and Female." Of "Who Changed Your Wife?" Of "Forbidden Fruit."

Then try to imagine a story greater than any of these—stronger, more unusual, more thrilling.

Imagine scenes of settings, every one of them more elaborate, more daring, more luxurious than anything you have ever seen on the screen.

Now imagine twelve of the best-known players in America, working under the magic direction of De Mille.

If you can imagine one superlative picture with all this—and more—you will have a slight idea of "The Affairs of Anatol."

People have been talking about it a year in advance. They'll be talking for ten years after.

What Kind of a Day Do You Wish Yourself?

Suppose you could make a wish at the breakfast table and finally have the wish come true. Would you say,

"I want this to be a good day," or—

"I'm willing for this day to drag along?"

If you keep on wishing your days with the food you eat, finally the wish is likely to come true.

Grape-Nuts helps your wish for a good day. Nothing miraculous; just the natural result from right food with the right taste.

There is a charm of flavor and crispness in Grape-Nuts that is like the smile of a good friend at the breakfast table—

And Grape-Nuts, with cream or milk, is fully nourishing—feeding the tissues and glands, the bone and blood, with just those elements which nature requires—building strength without any "heaviness."

Grape-Nuts is the perfected goodness of wheat and malted barley, scientifically developed—ready to eat from the package.

A Grape-Nuts breakfast or lunch is a practical wish for good luck.

Money in Coconuts.

In the last few years a strong and growing interest has developed in coconut culture in the Philippine Islands. Not only are the native planters awakening to the advantages of modern methods, but foreign capital and enterprise see a prosperous future in the industry. It is virtually impossible for the prospective planter to either purchase or lease a bearing coconut grove, but large areas of virgin land are available for new plantations, more especially in the Moro province, where conditions are ideal for coconut culture.
